mony performed, four gontleinen, who were unable to procure teats in the theighe, were proceeding along on foot, when Miss Tutbill'a nieco culled her attention to them, and remarked that they looked more like pall benrers than wedding guests. What nore like pall beners than wedding guests. What a strange significance there was in those few words. They were united at 10 o'clock, not after the ceremiumy Mr. Field and his happy bride crossed its river on thoice, in order to take the express train. There had heen some doubts expressed regarding the safety of the ice, and when once fairly across, inev corgr tubted each after the river affely.

When the accident occurred, Mrs. Field and her friends were sitting at the rear of the last current the storest notice.

PEROCETY OF THE WAR IN MOROCCO -Accord ing to the Centa correspondent of the London Times the wer is Morocco is waged with savage berbarity It is positively stated and believed in comp that the Moorish Emperor grants a dollar for every head and four for every live Spatierd brought ie. We and not aware that any four doller premiums have yet been gained. The galley claves, wan have been armed and who fight desparately, and have had a good many killed and wounded, have been promitted good many killed and wounded, have been promised a dellar for every live Moor they heing hu, and they go out of nighte, on the prowl, is hopes of ceptures. Although the much higher price offered by the Moorish government for living than for dead would serve to indicate a desire to humanize the war, it has hitherto beon corried up antirely without quarter. The Moora is gau in that way, with a system of pittless slaughter, and the Spunierds have been example and how derupalously follow their example. Hitherto we have not brought in a eiggle prisoner. A very few have been made, but killed by the soldiers before they got into comp, at which Gen. O'Dennell was they got into camp, at which Gen. O'Dennell was

The soldiers say that the Moors will not let themselves be laker; that they fight disperately notil killed; and this is very likely to be the ease in the majority of instances, but it is difficult to believe the some captures, although only of men wounded, might not be made. The Moors, they say, lie down and will not rise, and their obstinacy provides a layonet thrust. They might, one would think, be bound hand and foot and carried in, and it is not impossible that useful information might be extracted from some of them. Mercy in war is not, however, one of the most conspicuous war is not, however, one of the most conspicuous qualities of Spaniards, and moreover there are tales and tradicals current of borrible creekles which the Moors are in the habit of icfl cting on the

The correspondent of the New York Times gives the following sketch of Mr. Cerwiu: Mr. Corwin is a large-hodied and well-cond tioned mun, about five feel ton luches high; with short gray hair; large hazel eyes, full of subtlety and humor; shaved and plump cheeks, of a florid brunelle complexion: henvygray eyebrows, which have the faculty of rising unit folling an extraordi-

As a retailer of encedotes, Mr. Corwin is without an equal in Congress—perhaps in the country. His powers as an actor are of the highest order, end he is too often tempted, by his irresistible success as n humorist, to brench off into little illustrative stories, which rather mar the general effect of his se rious elocution. Au accomplished classical scholar and student, the Ohio wagon-boy used to read Virgil's Buoolice while driving his leam, thirty years ngo, over the prairies; and since that time every his unward course has been made use of as affording him larger opportunities for improvement Now and then his voice swells with noble eloquence Mow and then his voice swells with noble elequence commore especially when describing the Puritan at Marston Monr, ushing on to the cry: "The sword of the Lord end of tiidcon." But then he again descends into some humorous recital, so that none descends into some hustorous recital, an that none but those who crowd round him on the floor can hear what he is saying. It is thought prohable that, should Shermen he withdrawn, either liev. Pennington or Gov. Corwin may ho used to fill his
